UNDERLYING FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

Global equities pulled back in September as renewed concerns over inflation, a slowing global economy and the imminent tightening of US monetary policy weighed on investors. Developed-market yields increased in most major markets as central bank tapering discussions and rising concerns about inflation outweighed signs of moderating global growth.

During the month, equity components, except for the Japan and UK components were negative. Fixed-income components, except for Low Duration, were negative. Within currencies, the British pound had negative performance relative to other major currencies. It weakened compared with the US dollar, Taiwan dollar, Canadian dollar, Norwegian dollar, Singapore dollar and yen. It was up compared with the Brazilian real and South African rand.

Volatility Management

The volatility cap of the Fund is 8.0%. Market volatility saw an uptick in September as the Fed announced a tentative schedule to begin tapering and gridlock in the US government over President Biden's economic agenda persisted. The Fund also experienced an uptick in realized volatility for the month, but never exceeded its volatility cap. The Fund was fully invested in the risky assets at September month end.
